

Citizenship-by-Investment: A New Asset Class for Global Citizens

Savvy global investors are embracing residence- and citizenship-by-investment as a new asset class to unlock novel risk management options and optimize the high-net-worth (HNW) portfolio.

An excellent hedge against global instability

Wealthy individuals are increasingly incorporating alternative residence and citizenship into their investment portfolios, given their ability to expand business operations and extend market reach. This new asset class also secures greater global influence and opportunities and safeguards investors against volatile markets and political instability that put pressure on risk-based assets such as equities.

Balancing risk and opportunity

Like gold or AAA-rated sovereign securities, alternative residence and/or citizenship are a safe-haven investment — with the additional benefit of providing options for improved physical safety for HNW individuals and their families. Acquiring alternative residence or citizenship diversifies investor risk by providing optimal protection against global economic and political volatility. Not least, holding alternative residence or citizenship ensures access to an extended suite of opportunities for business, education, investment, and mobility.

Freedom and independence: Assets worth protecting

The ability for strategic investors to hold multiple citizenships prevents them from being dependent on a single country, enabling them to make autonomous decisions regarding the deployment of their capital and to pursue their interests with fewer restrictions.
